I owned a 1990 Arctic Cat Jag 440. I took it to the radar runs multiple times, in a 1/4 mile it never exceeded 67 MPH. I got the clutches rebuilt, changed the chain and sprockets, put all new bearings, the compression was around 110 psi on each cylinder and the thing was just slow.

1989 Arctic Cat Jag 440 AFS with paperwork and original manuals. I am the third owner of this sled and have owned it since Oct 2012. Since ownership, I have replaced the fuel lines, spark plugs (each season), fuel filter and the skegs/carbides on the skies. I also added a small handle bar riser to make upright riding more comfortable and enjoyable.

Those AFS chassis sleds were pretty good. The 440LC was available before 1994, the sled you are looking at is "really" the older Jag AFS LT that was offered in 91/92/93, then they changed them all to "Cheetah's", then they went to the AWS Bearcat platform in 1995/6. The 440F is a pretty good engine, keep the carbs clean and it lasted a long time.
