Paul's Letters to Church Leaders - The Gospel Project

The majority of the letters of the New Testament were written by Paul, which are called the Pauline Epistles. The word "epistles" literally just means letters, and the name Paul is used as an adjective to describe the letters: Pauline Epistles = Paul's Letters. Consequentially, Paul is viewed as a major source of biblical theology, because he is a major author of the New Testament and teaches about numerous subjects that still pertain to modern Christians.

Pauline Epistles - New Testament Letters Written by Paul

Ephesians: The Church as the Body of Christ (A.D. 61-62) Paul covers the spiritual privileges and responsibilities of the church. Unlike most of Paul's letters, Ephesians seems not to have been written in response to a particular circumstance or controversy. It has an almost meditative quality.
