The Rhetoric Of Fiction Wayne

Wayne Booth's The Rhetoric of Fiction (1961)is a classic in the history of literary criticism and doesn't need a reference from me. I reread it recently as background for a personal essay I am writing about the 60's. I'm even more impressed now than when I first read it more than fifty years ago.

Wayne C. Booth and The Rhetoric of Fiction By Nasrullah Mambrol on March 2, 2019 • (0). In his 1979 study, Critical Understanding: The Powers and Limits of Pluralism, Booth argues that there are five ways of approaching novels, or literary texts. The critic James Phelan summarizes these as follows: as an imitation of the world external to it (the mimetic approach), as an event in time (the ...
